simple little velvet hat devoid of trimming.

"I have no aigrettes, and never wear birds of any kind on my hats," said Mrs. Astor, shaking her finger good-naturedly under the nose of an inquiring reporter. "I congratulate this country for prohibiting the importation of aigrettes. If any of the women on the Lusitania have aigrettes on their hats I hope they will lose them."

Mrs. Astor was accompanied by her six-year-old son, William Waldorf, Jr. This was his first trip to his mother's home, and he was wildly excited as the Statue of Liberty, of which he had been told, came into view.

"I am an American," said Mrs. Astor, "and I am proud of it. I am not an Englishwoman. You know I am a Virginian. You Yankees may change, but Southerners, never. I simply could not stay away from Virginia any longer, and I am going to visit my people there."

Philadelphia, October 31.—John Eberwein, an eighty-one-year-old veteran, who murdered his wife last Wednesday by striking her with an ironing board, to-day at the coroner's inquest declared he killed the woman at her request. He insisted upon being a witness.

"Allow me to tell you how my wife died," Eberwein pleaded with Coroner Knight. "Those men, meaning the witnesses against him, do not know anything about it."

He was allowed to become a witness. "Lirzie fell downstairs. I helped her to get back to the dining-room, but you know I am old and could not pull her along like a young tellow. My arms gave out. She knew she was fatally injured, and she asked me to kill her. I picked up the ironing board and struck her. She turned to me and told me she was not dead. She told me to hit her again, and I did."

Eberwein was held without bail to await the action of the grand jury. He is believed to be insane.

The ambassador and his staff were escorted to the palace by a detachment of the floyal Guards. Ambassador Willard later in the day called on Premier Dato and the principal members of the Spanish royal family.

The Madrid newspapers to-day publish long articles referring to the cordial relations • between the United States and Spain, and commenting in vorably on the elevation of the American legation to an embassy.

King Alfonso, in the course of his formal address in reply to Ambassador Willard's greeting, announced his decision to rates the Spanish legation at Washington to the rank of an embassy. He also requested Ambassador Willard to convey to President Wilson the expression of his sincere friendship and wishes for the good fortune and prosperity of the United States.
